Mr. Beresford-Hope Since the name of Mr. Beresford-Hope is likely to be henceforth a "household word" in Virginia in connection with the Stonekson statue a few particulars respecting him may not be unacceptable to our

Alexander James Beresford Beresford-Hope is the youngest son of the late Thomas Hope, Esq., a wealthy banker, and author of Anastatias, a book of considerable celebrity. His mother was a daughter of De is Poer Bereaford, Lord Dectes and Arct bishop of Toam, and after the death of Mr. Thomas Hope, she was married to Viscount Beres-

Mr. Beresford-Hope was born on the 25th of January, 1820, and was educated at Harrow School, where he won a Scholarship and row School, where he won a Scholarship and Cambridge, where he school he carried off Cambridge, where he can school he carried off School S numerous prizes; and at Trinity College. Cambridge, where (in 1840) he carried off. graduated as Bachelor of Arts, obtaining the University Prize for Letin essays. In 1844 be proceeded to the degree of Master of Arts, in 1848 was made a D. C. L. of Gxford, and in 1864 an LL. D. of Cambridge.

In 1842 Mr. Hope married Lady Madred Cecil, daughter of the Marquis of Saksbury, by whom he has a numerous family.

Perhaps Mr. Beresford-Hope is best known as a devoted admirer of Gothic architecture.
As president of the Ecclesiological Society, and of the Architectural Museum, he has done much to revive the taste for the Gothic in art which is so noticeable a feature in modern England. St. Augustine College at Canterbary, and the famous All Saints Church in London, were built under his su

Mr. Beresford Hope has also ventured into the field of literature, having published works on English Cathedrals, Church Matters, and other sutjects. He is also believed to have been the founder and said to be the present proprietor of the Saturday Serieu, a weekly London journal of world-wide ce-

During the American civil war Mr. Beresford-Hope was a firm and loyal friend to the southern States. He was chairman of the Southern Independence Association, and by purse, pen, and speech liberally aided the Confederacy. When Stonewall Jackson died he became chairman of the committee of noblemen and gentlemen organized in Loudon for the purpose of raising a statue of the iza-mortal hero in Richmend, the capital of the Confederate States. That statue, the handiwork of Foley, one of England's greatest sculptors, will forever testify to the sympathy felt for the southern States in Great

In 1841 Mr. Beresford-Hope was elected member of Parliament for Maidstone, which town he represented for many years. Subsequently he sat for Stoke-upon-Trent, and is now member for the University of Cambridge. In politics he is a Conservative. with a strong tendency to independence of action, which has occasionally aroused the wrath of Mr. Disraeli. A recognized leader of the High-Church party, Mr. Beresford-Hope is never more at home than when addressing Church congresses and occupying himself in ecclesiastical affairs generally. He has no more use for a dissenter than had Dr. Johnson. Beligion with him is a vital principle, but it is strictly confined in its operation to the State Church. Thus he is as a churchman strongly preju-As the inheritor of his step-father Viscount

INDIAN SUMMER .- To the Editor of the Philadelphia Times: In your editorial of yesterday you refer to "Indian Summer, which in this latitude begins with the last week of October," etc., etc. What is Indian summer? Probably not one person in twenty thousand knows. Most every warm day in the fall is spoken of as Indian summer. Several years ago the writer was determined to be informed, and inquired of many persons who should have known, judging from their possessing great stores of knowledge, and the only practical-sense idea he obtained was from the Rev. John Lyon, who spoke thus:

"The leaves generally begin to fall in October, and after the first frost, and continue to do so during the month. Then, very generally, when all the leaves have fallen, there comes a cold rain and a bitter frost, fermentation and decomposition of vegetation. Great heat is produced by decomposition, which adds warmth to the earth, causing that warm, misty atmosphere which continues until nearly the end of November. And it is during this warm spell in November that tradition says (in this latitude) the Indians laid up their corn for the win-

If this is a correct idea of Indian summer, and you can add any information upon the subject, your readers will ever pray for the knowledge they obtain upon the delightful INDIAN SUMMER.
